answer let the questioner look back upon the "furniture" of English literature for a century prior to the appearance of the Waverley Novels. The gorgeous picturesqueness of the Shaksperian, the Spenserian, and the Jonsonian postry had disappeared. There is a passing glow of the superbly decorative in "Comus" and "The Allegro." There is a transient, meteor-like flush of picturesqueness in a few of Dryden's diamas. But what is the mise en scene of Wycherly, and Congreve, and Farquhar? The Temple gardens, rakes' dressing rooms, gambling houses, usurers' counting-rooms, demireps' perlours, and roystering tayerns, where Brandyfaced Nan is serving out strong waters to the 1 if 1506. And even if we take the most brilliant and accomplished writer of the eighteenth century, how do we find that he has "furnished" his poems? Pope's "Hind" is as polished and crisp as a crystal chandelier, and as colourless. It needed Flaxman, full fifty years afterwards, to show us the warriors who sate down before Troy in their habits as they lived.
